 - Survey results indicated that:
 - the majority of people found the Oklahoma newspapers to be the most important, then national and regional newspapers were found to be the least important
 - several people felt that upgrading to the EBSCO product, rather than having newspapers would be a better option
 - Victoria asked that anyone who has not turned in their surveys should do so as soon as possible.
 - The committee has written and RFP, but is not getting a response from Newsbank or Olive
 - Habib Tabatabai asked when the deadline for responding to the survey was. There is not a specific deadline, but it would be preferred that everyone get them turn in a week from today.

 - Federal fiscal year began October 1st, 2014; currently a budget has not been passed by Congress to fund state agencies.
 - Following the election on Tuesday November 4th, 2014 there is a possibility that Congress will get a budget passed by the end of the fiscal year. If not Congress will perform a Continuing Resolution, where they fund at the same level as the previous fiscal year through a specific date.
 - Typically ODL does not find out their budget until January.
 - Due to receiving the Maintenance of Effort Waiver, ODL will get 100% of the funds Congress allocates to them for the federal fiscal year.
- Fourteen institutions received grants from ODL for digitization projects and training
 - Six (43%) of applicants were from academic institutions: Cameron University, Langston University, Northeastern State University, Oklahoma Christian University, Southwestern Oklahoma State University and Bacone College.

 - This would mean that individual institutions usage statistic would not be available without subscribing to add on products.
 - Susan asked OCALD members if not having these statistics would matter to us. Melissa Huffman explained that not having these usage statistics would matter to academic institutions, because a lot of our purchasing decisions are made based on these statistics.
 - Susan said that it might be possible for institutions to opt-out of participating in the geolocation program
 - ODL is looking at having geolocations in place by their next RFP on July 1st, 2016
 - Katie King said that geolocations could affect certain colleges accreditation abilities
 - Konstance Wamble-Crownover said their institution was in favor of geolocations because it eliminated the difficulty of getting a valid list of students from their administration
